The First Choice in the Last Line of Defense

IT ONLY TOOK ONE TRIP TO DALLAS FOR A CLE PRESENTED by the National College for DUI Defense for Brad Williams to get hooked. That was several years ago. Since then, Williams and the attorneys at the Law Offices of Bennett & Williams have relentlessly sought to educate themselves in the area of DWI defense. In the process, Williams and his partner, Tommy Bennett, have become some of the most well-trained and qualified DWI defense lawyers in the state of Arkansas.

Among other accomplishments, Williams and Bennett are trained field sobriety test instructors. "No police officer testifying against your client should ever know more about field sobriety tests than you," Williams says.

In addition to owning almost a dozen different breathalyzers (the oldest dating back to 1958), Williams and Bennett completed the certification course offered by National Patent Analytical Systems, the manufacturer of the evidentiary breathalyzer known as the BAC DataMaster.

Williams views the area of DWI defense as being at the forefront of the erosion of civil liberties in the criminal justice system. He prides himself on his firm's accomplishments in successfully defending citizens accused of drunk driving. Nothing gives him more satisfaction than winning cases that even other lawyers often think are unwinnable.

Williams' firm devotes the vast majority of its practice to DWI defense. Williams attributes the zealotry in his approach to every DWI client's case to the principles imparted upon him at the Trial Practice Institute at the National Criminal Defense College.

"Standing up in the courtroom as the last line of defense separating us from a police state is an honor and a great responsibility," Williams says. "Whenever I get discouraged, this thought fires me up to carry on the fight against those who seek to trample on our constitutional rights."

In being chosen to 2010 Mid-South Rising Stars, Williams is honored to be recognized for his dedication to his craft.
